DISSERTATION

TITLE: “Essays on the Political Economy of Criminal Prosecutions”

ABSTRACT: How do electoral, policy-related, and racial considerations influence the behavior of elected prosecutors and judges? The first chapter of my dissertation leverages a simple formal model to investigate how voters attain accountability despite known ideological disagreement with their prosecutor. This work clarifies how candidate preferences and electoral concerns shape a prosecutor’s charging behavior. The second chapter applies insights from this framework to a newly constructed data-set of 5.9 million felony cases. Regression Discontinuity Design estimates suggest that electoral incentives exacerbate the charging severity of Republican prosecutors on cases involving African American defendants. The final chapter (co-written with Sandy Gordon) provides the first within-official estimates of the effect of recall elections on the behavior of elected officials.
